

Citizens of the World

Political Engagement and Policy Attitudes of Millennials across the Globe

The Millennial Generation, those born between the early 1980s and the late 1990s, is the most educated, digitally connected, and globalized in the history of the world. Citizens of the World examines the Millennial Generation from a comparative perspective, providing insight into the degree to which generational differences in political attitudes and behaviors transcend cultures and borders. Drawing on data from Australia, Chile, Mexico, New Zealand, South Africa, South Korea, the United Kingdom, and the United States, Citizens of the World shows how Millennials' global identity has developed and how it fuels their policy attitudes and willingness to engage in the political world.

FEATURES

- Argues that Millennials have a distinct generational identity that makes them more similar to their counterparts across the globe than older adults within their own countries
- Examines Millennial attitudes about family life, gender roles, institutions, politics, religion, lifestyle, and the future to better understand how or if governance will change under this generation
- Focuses on ongoing global challenges and socializing events that have allowed Millennials to develop a common set of political attitudes
- Includes a novel dataset and comparative research from Australia, Chile, Mexico, New Zealand, South Africa, South Korea, the United Kingdom, and the United States
